It's my birthday and I'll ignore your questions if I want to

New revelations. Mayor offers to speak to media about transit and taxes, but not about the new twists in the crack-video scandal

Two of Mayor Rob Ford's close allies, Deputy Mayor Doug Holyday and Coun. Gary Crawford, said they believe the journalists who reported on a video Ford says doesn't exist.

The former provincial finance minister, recently retired Liberal Dwight Duncan, called for Ford's resignation.

And Ford was bombarded from morning until evening with questions on an ongoing crack-cocaine scandal that threatens his career. He refused to offer any answers.

On his 44th birthday, Ford attempted on Tuesday to complete a routine day of administration business: chairing his executive committee, meeting with schoolchildren, criticizing proposed new taxes. But the scandal continued to consume city hall even as the mayor maintained his silence.

Ford was questioned by a large group of reporters upon his arrival at his office, whenever he left the committee meeting, and after a speech on Metrolinx's transit-tax recommendations.

He has not answered a single media question on the 12-day-old scandal in detail, and again provided no information.

Torstar News Service reported Tuesday that Ford aide David Price had mentioned the video's possible location to since-fired chief of staff Mark Towhey. When Ford was asked in the morning why members of his staff appear to think the video exists, he said, "Ask my staff."

Price did not respond to questions posed to him.

When Ford was asked after the evening speech for even a general response to new revelations in the scandal, he said, "I've addressed those concerns."

Reporters shouted that he had not. Ignoring them, Ford offered to speak about transit and taxes, then left the room. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

See it to believe it

"I think if we could just get the video then we could analyze the video, and see if it's doctored or if it's real and we can go from there."

While he is not sure if the video is real or fake, Deputy Mayor Doug Holyday says he believes a video does exist.

Murray Frum left legacy of philanthropy, art

He was perhaps most recognized for his famous wife and children.

But Murray Frum carved out his own legacy, combining his passion for philanthropy and art that defined his life to the end.

Frum, a millionaire developer and art collector, died Monday in Toronto, just days after returning from Italy where he was trying to pin down the authenticity of one of his sculptures, which he believed was crafted by the Renaissance master Donatello. He was 81.

"Every day I'm still discovering a new charity that he was involved in," said his son David Frum, a journalist and a former speechwriter for then U.S. president George W. Bush.

The elder Frum began collecting African art with his first wife, CBC broadcaster Barbara Frum, who died of leukemia in 1992.

Frum donated more than 80 pieces to the Art Gallery of Ontario and, with son-in-law Howard Sokolowski, built the gallery they are housed in.

A memorial service will be held Friday at 11 a.m. at the Royal Conservatory of Music, 273 Bloor St. W.

Cop denies assaulting G20 summit bystander

Court. Glenn Weddell says he has little memory of interaction with Dorian Barton, Crown seeking digital photo expert opinion

A police officer charged with assaulting a man at the Toronto G20 summit protests three years ago says he did not attack, but rather helped, the victim.

Const. Glenn Weddell testified Tuesday he had virtually no memory of his interactions with Dorian Barton, whom he's accused of beating near Queen's Park on June 26, 2010, because they were insignificant.

Weddell testified that, from viewing videos and photos of the event and his sketchy memory, it appears his only contact with Barton was helping him up from the pavement, where he lay, and directing him northbound.

"I'm picking him up by his shirt and getting him out of the area," Weddell told his lawyer Peter Brauti, as he reviewed the images. "I'm asking him to leave or he'll be arrested."

Barton appears to stumble and fall down on some grass as he's being moved, he said.

Weddell, 49, has pleaded not guilty in Ontario Superior Court to assault with a weapon and assault causing bodily harm in the first criminal trial of any officer charged in the controversial policing of the 2010 Toronto G20 summit.

The married father of one testified he was part of a large group of officers in riot gear at Queen's Park who gave demonstrators several warnings to disperse or risk arrest.

He denied hitting Barton with a riot shield or baton, as alleged.

Earlier that day, Weddell said he had seen masked rioters dressed in black pelting police with rocks and bottles and smashing store windows at King and John streets.

Prosecutor Philip Perlmutter suggested Barton was angry after a long day of provocations and lashed out. "You just lost control," he said.

Perlmutter suggested a video shows Weddell brandishing his baton aggressively and, with another officer, hurling Barton to the grass.

"No," Weddell replied.

Police conduct their investigation at the farm belonging to Dellen Millard in the village of Ayr on Tuesday.

Police return to Millard farm in search of evidence

Investigation. Property comes under scrutiny as officers look into deaths of Toronto woman, murder suspect's father

Toronto homicide investigators descended on the farm Tuesday where Tim Bosma's remains were found this month.

Police are investigating two cases related to murder suspect Dellen Millard, 27 — the apparent suicide of his father Wayne and the disappearance of 23-year-old Toronto woman Laura Babcock.

On Tuesday afternoon, officers executed a search warrant at the sprawling Ayr farm owned by Millard, who is charged with first-degree murder alongside 25-year-old Oakville man Mark Smich.

Laura Babcock CONTRIBUTED

Police refused to comment on what they were searching for, but officers on scene focused on what may be buried beneath farmland, using sophisticated radar equipment.

Hamilton police cleared the scene last week after a comprehensive ground search in Bosma's death.

Babcock was last seen in the Queen Street West and Roncesvalles Avenue area on June 26, 2012. Her phone records show she and Millard exchanged eight phone calls in the days leading up to her disappearance — including her last call on July 3.

Police did not originally interview Millard in the case. Babcock's parents say Millard and their daughter were friends.

Laura's mother, Linda Babcock, told Torstar News Service on Tuesday they had not heard anything about the search.

Investigators are also reexamining the apparent suicide of Millard's father, Wayne, who died last November at the Etobicoke home he shared with his son.

Police eventually ruled out foul play, but a coroner's investigation remained open even after the body was cremated.

Walmart? Not in my neighbourhood, say downtowners

Augusta Avenue and Baldwin Street in Kensington Market.
RICK MADONIK/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

RioCan, the country's largest real-estate investment trust, has submitted plans to the City of Toronto to build a three-storey retail complex downtown, just past the western fringe of Kensington Market.

If approved, it would house the mother of all discount retailers, the archetypal box store: Walmart.

The prospective arrival of the American chain, whose presence has been long opposed by city-centre denizens, has neighbourhood residents and councillors fuming.

Second time's the charm?

- In December, the Ontario Municipal Board agreed to quash an initial RioCan plan for the site, concluding the development proposal was significant enough to warrant a site-specific rezoning bylaw amendment, rather than the series of minor variances being sought.
- RioCan has since resubmitted its application accordingly, and the proposal is expected to go before community council in the coming weeks.

"It's something which must be fought at every single corner and on every single street," said Coun. Adam Vaughn, who spoke out adamantly against the proposed Walmart he fears would gut small businesses in the Market and elsewhere in his ward.

RioCan CEO Ed Sonshine confirmed Tuesday Walmart will be the building's chief tenant, if the development gets the go-ahead, at the site of the Kromer Radio store, across from the Toronto Western Hospital at Bathurst and Nassau Streets.

Sonshine said the store would create "hundreds" of jobs and provide cheap goods and groceries.

Man charged with causing indignity to body

Human remains. Cause of death of woman found dismembered in bag not yet known

A Toronto man has been charged with causing an indignity to a dead body after a woman's dismembered remains were found in a duffel bag on a trail in the city's west end, police said Tuesday.

Investigators are searching through garbage for evidence at a waste transfer station and are also searching two apartments, which they describe as potential crime scenes.

Det. John Margetson says they are still looking for about two-thirds of the woman's remains but aren't sure they will be found.

"There's indications of forensic evidence at both scenes," he said, but added the death can't be ruled a homicide at this time.

A post-mortem has been conducted but the cause of death has not been determined.

Police say they are treating the death as suspicious and will not be releasing the woman's name until a forensic examination confirms her identity and her family is notified.

The man charged in the case, Adonay Zekarias, 41, was arrested at his home Sunday.

Margetson says the suspect and the person believed to be the victim were known to each other. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Senate committee votes to send Duffy's claims to RCMP for review

Expense scandal. From 2011-12, Tory senator asked for Ottawa-based living expenses for 49 days when he wasn't there

Senate officials confirmed they have found a troubling pattern of Sen. Mike Duffy improperly claiming living expenses, including several days in 2011 when he was campaigning across the country for the Conservatives.

Senators meeting at a committee late Tuesday voted to send the matter of Duffy's expenses to the RCMP, after hearing the new information. Duffy's claims had originally been scrutinized to determine where his principal residence was — the latest information introduce a whole new wrinkle into the scandal.

Duffy did not attend the meeting. Last week, he said he was looking forward to setting the record straight at the committee.

Senate finance officials detailed how Duffy made claims for living expenses for being on Senate business in Ottawa, while he was elsewhere in the country.

The Canadian Press first reported two weeks ago that Duffy had said he was on Senate business while campaigning with Conservative candidates.

But it wasn't until the latest report was tabled Tuesday night that an accounting was given on the precise days Duffy was claiming expenses.

During the 2011 election, Duffy asked for Ottawa-based living expenses on seven separate days when he was out of town.

In total, in 2011 and 2012, Duffy made claims on 49 days he was not in Ottawa. Senate finance officials rejected 24 of those claims at the time they were made, but didn't raise alarm bells.

"It represents a pattern that raises concerns," the report released Tuesday said.

An independent audit by the firm Deloitte had raised the possibility that Duffy had been claiming expenses while not in Ottawa, but underlined that the senator had not provided them with adequate documentation and never met with auditors.

The firm also pointed out one unusual situation where Duffy had claimed to be in Ottawa, but was actually vacationing in Florida. Duffy called it a "clerical error."

The Conservatives in the Senate declared the matter closed shortly after receiving the audit, pointing to the fact that Duffy had repaid the $90,000 in living expenses.

The matter blew open again, however, when it was revealed that the $90,000 bill was actually paid with the help of the prime minister's then chief of staff Nigel Wright.

Heated question period

The matter of a $90,000 payment by Harper's ex-chief of staff Nigel Wright to cover Duffy's expenses took up most of question period earlier Tuesday.

- Eschewing the histrionics and partisan broadsides that normally dominate question period, opposition leaders posed short, sharp, relentless queries about when the Prime Minister Stephen Harper learned about Wright's payment.
- The onslaught elicited no new information as Harper stuck resolutely to his story that Wright acted on his own, without informing the prime minister or anyone else in his office.

Witnesses not co-operating in robocalls probe

Canada's chief electoral officer is confirming for the first time that Conservative party workers have failed to co-operate with his investigation of fraudulent robocalls. # Israel could strike Russia-Syria missile shipment

Hardline warning. Government fears weapons could fall into hands of militant groups

Israel's defence chief said Tuesday a Russian plan to supply sophisticated anti-aircraft missiles to Syria was a "threat" and signalled that Israel is prepared to use force to stop the delivery.

The warning by Defence Minister Moshe Yaalon ratcheted up tensions with Moscow over the planned sale of S-300 air-defence missiles to Syria. Earlier in the day, a top Russian official said his government remained committed to the deal.

Israel has been lobbying Moscow to halt the sale, fearing the missiles would upset the balance of power in the region and could slip into the hands of hostile groups, including the Lebanese militia Hezbollah, a close ally of the Syrian regime.

Israel has carried out several airstrikes in Syria in recent months that are believed to have destroyed weapons shipments bound for Hezbollah. The government has not confirmed carrying out the attacks.

The delivery of the Russian missiles to Syria could limit the Israeli air force's ability to act.

The wrong hands

Since the Syrian conflict erupted in 2011, Israel has repeatedly voiced concerns that Syria's arsenal, including chemical weapons, could either be transferred to Hezbollah or fall into the hands of al-Qaida-affiliated rebels battling the Syrian president.

Eastern China. Firefighters rescue newborn baby lodged in sewer pipe

Chinese firefighters have rescued a newborn boy from a sewer pipe below a squat toilet, sawing out an L-shaped section and then delicately dismantling it to free the cocooned baby, who greeted the rescuers with cries.

A tenant heard the baby's sounds in the public restroom of a residential building in Zhejiang province in eastern China on Saturday and notified authorities, according to the state-run news site Zhejiang News. A video of the two-hour rescue that followed was broadcast widely on Chinese news programs and websites late Monday and Tuesday.

The child — named Baby No. 59 from the number of his hospital incubator — was reported safe in a nearby hospital, and news of the rescue prompted an outpouring from strangers who came to the hospital with diapers, baby clothes, powdered milk and offers to adopt the child.

Police are treating the case as an attempted homicide, and are looking for the mother and anyone else involved in the incident.

The landlord of the building in Pujiang county told Zhejiang News that it was unlikely the birth took place in the toilet room because there was no evidence of blood and she was not aware of any recent pregnancies among her tenants.

Novel coronavirus

SARS-related virus claims life of French patient

A French patient infected with a deadly new respiratory virus related to SARS died Tuesday of the disease, which has killed half of the 40 people known to be infected and alarmed health officials.

The novel coronavirus is related to SARS, which killed some 800 people in a global epidemic in 2003. Dr. Margaret Chan, head of the World Health Organization, singled out the illness in a speech on Monday in Geneva.

"We understand too little about this virus when viewed against the magnitude of its potential threat," Chan said at the annual WHO meeting. "We do not know where the virus hides in nature.

Fraud. Former CSIS watchdog boss arrested

The former head of Canada's spy-agency watchdog, who received prestigious government appointments and was nearly honoured with a street in his name, has been arrested abroad on fraud charges.

Arthur Porter has been detained by Panamanian authorities, along with his wife Pamela, several months after Quebec police announced they wanted to charge him in connection with the province's ongoing corruption scandals.

The pair's arrest was announced in a statement Monday by Quebec's anti-corruption police watchdog, which said the operation was carried out with the help of the RCMP and Interpol. "Extradition proceedings are being undertaken," the statement said.

Puerto Rico investigating animal abuse case

Authorities are investigating what they say is one of the worst cases of animal abuse they've seen in Puerto Rico: a puppy found alive with all four legs largely cut off, leaving exposed bone.

A veterinarian said the black mongrel puppy's bones were rotting and the infection was too severe to be treated. It was euthanized Sunday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jailed Canadian has been released, nearly 6 years on

Mohamed Kohail, shown in this undated photo, has been quietly released from a Saudi prison after nearly six years. HANDOUT/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Saudi Arabia. Kohail was freed in December but family has kept quiet to allow the case to play itself out

A Canadian who was once condemned to death by beheading has been quietly released from a Saudi prison, after almost six years behind bars.

Documents obtained by The Canadian Press indicate that Mohamed Kohail was freed last December.

The documents from the Department of Foreign Affairs, obtained through the Access to Information Act, are redacted and do not indicate the circumstances under which Kohail was freed.

His story drew international attention in 2007. The ex-Montrealer was sentenced to death for his alleged role in a fatal schoolyard melee.

Brother's status

Mohamed's brother, Sultan Kohail, had been sentenced to 200 lashes and a year in prison for being an accessory to the crime, before his case was appealed.

He and a Jordanian friend were both ordered beheaded, by sword, for their alleged involvement in the killing of a 19-year-old in a brawl that began with an insult to a girl by Kohail's brother, Sultan.

The brothers have repeatedly said they were acting in self-defence and were not involved in inflicting the fatal wounds during the fight, which had involved dozens of teenagers.

The country's highest court overturned the death penalty for Mohamed Kohail in 2010. Both brothers remain in Saudi Arabia, awaiting news about any developments in their legal status. THE CANADIAN PRESS

KARL-JOHAN PERSSON

The CEO of fashion retailer H&M speaks to Metro about pricey brands and Bangladeshi factory workers

THE BUSINESS OF CHEAP CHIC

ELISABETH BRAW
Metro World News in Stockholm

Life is going swimmingly for Karl-Johan Persson, H&M's young, handsome CEO — despite the global recession, the cheap-chic chain is doing well. But the recent collapse of a garment factory building in Bangladesh has put H&M in the spotlight, even though the retailer didn't use the factories. Persson talks with Metro in an exclusive interview at H&M's headquarters in Stockholm.

Has the recession harmed H&M or has it instead benefitted you because people have turned to cheaper clothes?
When the whole apparel market diminishes it affects H&M as well, but at the same time I think more people discover H&M in times like these because they start questioning their clothing purchases. People want a good look with a good quality for a low price, and that's what H&M offers.

Last month a clothing factory collapsed and killed over 1,000 workers. Now H&M, the biggest manufacturer of clothes in Bangladesh, has signed an agreement where you agree to help your Bangladeshi suppliers pay for safety measures. Are the factories safe now?
The factory collapse was horrific, but our code of conduct bans use of factories in residential areas, so this was not an H&M supplier. But we've been working to improve conditions in Bangladesh for a long time. The major change with the agreement is that we join up with other buyers, with trade unions and with the government.

But isn't the problem that people want cheap clothes?

Quoted

"If you spot our top for $15 and one elsewhere for $150, people will think, 'These workers are much better paid.' But their pay is the same."

Karl-Johan Persson, CEO of retailer H&M

Then it never makes sense for a company to use better factories.
Yes, but it's a common misperception that cheap brands use certain manufacturers and expensive brands use others. We're one of 30 to 40 companies buying from many of our suppliers. The workers' pay is the same regardless of which company is buying. What's interesting is not the price of the clothing item but what the company does. Don't look at the prices. Maybe I sound cocky, but I dare promise that no apparel company in the whole world does as much as H&M.

What does that look like for factory workers?
We've signed the new plan for building and fire safety in Bangladesh. And we demand that workers are paid the wages they should have. We're also involved in a social dialogue and educate workers about their rights. And we try to influence decision-makers. Recently I spoke with the Bangladeshi prime minister (Sheikh Hasina) about increasing the minimum wage.

CRACK SUMMER'S TO-DO LIST

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

If reading about Rob Ford has got you down, welcome to the Island of Sunny Sentiments, where the only thing we're thinking about today is where to go on our summer vacation.

In this, we're not alone. Across Canada, 5.2 million school kids are gazing out the window wondering the same thing.

Good idea, you're thinking. Anything beats another chapter of Ford Follies. Just one problem: too many choices. Once again, you've come to the right place. I'm an expert on Canadian getaways, having got to all of them except Newfoundland, which is always a bit out of reach.

To get you started, here are my top five Canadian summer vacation choices (in no particular order). Feel free to chime in anytime with your own. And don't forget to bring the beer.

Moraine Lake: Just 12.5 kilometres up (or is that down?) the road from its more famous sister Lake Louise in the Alberta Rockies, Moraine is a jaw-dropping postcard-perfect lake surrounded by 10 majestic, snow-capped peaks. It is so jaw-dropping, it was once featured on the back of the $20 bill, back when cash was cash and not plastic scented with a whiff of maple syrup.

Louisbourg: Parks Canada lists 167 National Historic Sites on its website. I haven't been to all 167, but the coolest I have been to is Louisbourg, the French fort on Cape Breton Island. The road to the fort is often shrouded in fog, so it's like travelling into the Twilight Zone to emerge 300 years in the past. In fact, this is Louisbourg's 300th birthday. Everything including the dinner menu is an authentic replica of the days before bilingualism when New France was more than a plank in Pauline Marois' platform. Actors recreate daily life in the fort and you're so swept away you forget to check your smartphone.

The Beach: Every province has one or more than one legendary strip of sand: Wasaga, Cavendish, Grand, Rathtrevor, Balmy, Winnipeg, Regina, and the mother of all beaches: Long Beach in Tofino and Ucluelet. Really long: 25 kilometres from one end of Radar to the other end of Wickaninnish. It's hard to single out a favourite, but I'm determined to spend the rest of my days trying.

Niagara-on-the-Lake: The classic tourist trap, but so what? It's a miracle this bucolic place still exists, so close to ... you know. Everyone here conspires to lighten your wallet, but unlike the Canada Revenue Agency and the cable company, they make you happy to oblige. Goes with other places that feature fudge: Niagara Falls, Granville Island, Banff, Lunenburg, etc.

The cottage: I grew up in one. My job was to haul water from a nearby artesian well and gather kindling for the fireplace. Now "the cottage" often sports a three-car garage and an indoor pool. But it's essentially the same idea. Go someplace simple and stay there until you feel better. And don't forget to bring the bacon.

Rolling on the floor owling

SWNS.COM

Friendship found in a dirty mop

This owl bears an uncanny resemblance to his new playmate, a mop, and thinks it is his sibling.

Lightning, a Siberian Eagle owl, got engrossed in the tool after spotting staff at the Screech Owl Sanctuary in Cornwall, southwest England, using it. The three-month-old chick was born in captivity as part of a breeding program. Lightning's attraction may be comical, but it's important for the bird's development, according to his owner.

"Young owls, like children, need this sort of playful enrichment when they are growing up and exploring the world," says Screech Owl Sanctuary head Carolyn Screech. "Everything is a big adventure, even this damp bundle of cleaning fabric."

The Robin Hood mentality is often a thief sleight of hand

Now You See Me. The latest altruistic bank heist film is breaking into theatres this weekend, but it's not the first movie to have been there

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Now You See Me starts giving back to audiences this weekend. HANDOUT

In just 12 minutes The Great Train Robbery tells the tale of a group of bandits who hold up a train and rob the passengers.

Made by Edwin Porter in 1903 it's been placed on the United States National Film Registry for its innovative use of composite editing, camera movement and on-location shooting.

It was one of the first narrative movies and it introduced moviegoers to the heist movie, a tradition that continues to this day.

This weekend Now You See Me presents an elaborate crime story of a team of magicians — led by Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson and Isla Fisher — who abracadabra their way into bank vaults.

They are Robin Hood-style crooks, stealing money and giving it back to their audiences.

The "steal from the rich to give to the poor" is a common theme in heist movies. Recently Tower Heist saw a rag tag group clean out a Bernie Madoff type in order to refund money to the people he swindled.

The Maiden Heist stars Christopher Walken as a museum security guard infatuated with the painting that gives the movie its name.

When it is announced that the artwork has been sold to a Danish gallery he's distraught — "Do you know how far away Copenhagen is?"— and ropes Morgan Freeman and William H. Macy into stealing the painting and two others so they can enjoy them together. Not exactly Robin Hood — they're stealing from the rich to give to themselves — but their motives are artistically pure.

Not so pure are the reasons behind the heist in The Good, the Bad, the Weird — an Asian take on the similarly named Sergio Leone spaghetti western.

It's a chaotic two-hour chase for a treasure map — and then the treasure — in 1930s wartime Manchuria between a bounty hunter (the Good, played by Jung Woo-sung), a leader of evil bandits (the Bad, Lee Byung-hun) and a train robber (the Weird, Song Kang-ho).

Director Ji-woon Kim calls this a "kimchee western," after the national dish of Korea because the plot and film, like the people of Korea, he says, are spicy and vibrant.

The Good, the Bad, the Weird has a few laughs but A Fish Called Wanda's story of armed robbery is a full-on comedy crime caper.

It has a 96 per cent rating on Rotten Tomatoes and was named one of the greatest British films of all time by Total Film.

Seth Rogen. Crowdfunding campaign a Superbad idea, former Freak says

Seth Rogen was the mind behind the cult hit Superbad. GETTY IMAGES

Now that Netflix has brought back the cult favourite Arrested Development, Seth Rogen is waiting for word of a Freaks and Geeks reboot.

The Vancouver-bred movie star notes his short-lived 1999 NBC comedy has found new life on the online streaming service, where it has amassed even more fans — just as Arrested Development did before Netflix announced it would back fresh episodes about the dysfunctional Bluth clan.

Rogen says he'd be open to a limited run of some kind of Freaks and Geeks reunion if the original cast, writers, directors and producers could be assembled, too.

"If they were able to do that I would be very open to doing more Freaks and Geeks," Rogen said Monday before attending a special screening of his big screen comedy This is the End in Toronto.

"I bet a lot of the people would do it."

But the Knocked Up star put the kibosh on any sort of crowdfunded effort, such as the online fundraising campaigns that are fuelling a Veronica Mars movie and actor Zach Braff's sophomore directing project, Wish I Was Here.

"It seems weird to be taking money from fans to create something, I don't like that concept as much," Rogen said later during a Q&A session with fans following his movie, which he co-wrote and co-directed with fellow Superbad and Pineapple Express scribe Evan Goldberg. THE CANADIAN PRESS

This Is The End

Rogen admitted it was not easy for him and Goldberg to convince a studio to back their apocalyptic comedy This Is The End — despite an A-list cast including pals James Franco, Jonah Hill, Michael Cera, Jay Baruchel, Craig Robinson and Danny McBride.

- The plot. The meta-horror comedy features Rogen and his real-life celeb friends playing outrageous versions of themselves, and that appeared to be a real sticking point with financial backers.

Making new art with classic sensibilities

Blancanieves. Filmed in the traditional black and white, this Spanish flavoured revisit of Snow White tries to bridge gap between cinema and theatre

scene@metronews.ca

Steeped in black and white cinematography, Blancanieves blends old with new world. HANDOUT

Before Jack Warner and his brothers found pay dirt in the form of a singing and talking Al Jolson and changed commercial cinema, movies were silent, designed to be image driven and dialogue free works of art. In the more opulent and realized pictures, full scores were composed and performed live at grandiose screenings of the pictures, truly bridging the gap between cinema and theatre.

That spirit of sound marrying image to create dream-like narrative entertainment is alive, well and rapturous in writer/director Pablo Berger's superlative magic-realist fable Blancanieves. Filmed in silvery black and white, this elegant Spanish flavoured revisit of Snow White blends bullfighting and strained parental relations in what is one of the most gorgeous films of this — or any other — year.

"I have always believed cinema should be a sensorial experience," Berger told Metro on the eve of the project's Toronto theatrical opening.

And Blancanieves is certainly that, as many critics instantly attested to when the film premiered at TIFF in 2012, including the recently late icon Roger Ebert, who was the first to rave about it in print.

"He was key," admits Berger.

Must be heard to be seen

"I have always believed cinema should be a sensorial experience."

Pablo Berger
Writer/director of Blancanieves, which premiered at TIFF in 2012

"After our first screening at TIFF, the world premiere, the next day after Roger wrote that review, all the buyers and producers from around the world in Toronto at that time came to see it and I'll forever thank Roger for that. He was the essential element to the success of the film."

Blancanieves is a passionate fervor, with expressionist imagery and a novel storyline involving a girl who runs afoul of her stepmother while forging a belated relationship with her invalid father, a former decorated matador. It is a film as reliant on its director's vision as it is the score by composer Alfonso de Villalonga.

"These films I make are my children. Though all of them are never perfect, but they have their own life. I accept my films as they are. A film like Blancanieves is so personal and it took me eight years to bring it to screen. But now it is getting a new life. Just now in Madrid, we screened the film with a live orchestra performing Alfonso's score. A film like this can have many lives and can be seen more than once and appreciated in different ways."

Mary Murphy is a reality show judge — and a ballroom pro. GETTY IMAGES

So you think you can top this summer show? Ask the expert

Dancing queen. Mary Murphy talks about former contestants, fellow judges

scene@metronews.ca

So You Think You Can Dance may be in its 10th season, but judge Mary Murphy is having no less fun in her job.

The bubbly ballroom pro spoke with us about season 10 while en route to the airport for a TV appearance, her chatter infused with a hint of Southern twang and that signature gregarious laughter of hers.

The show is almost 10 years old — how does that make you feel?
It went by in a snap. I'm very grateful and really proud of the show and all the dancers that come back. I would say a good half of (this year's contestants) are probably 18. They've just been waiting for the day (they can audition). So many of them say, "I started when I was 9, dreaming about the day I'd be on So You Think You Can Dance."

It's starting to be like a rite of passage. Do you stay in touch with any former contestants?
We certainly do. One of our guest judges this year is gonna be tWitch (Stephen Boss,) who was one of our past contestants, and he's engaged to Allison Holker, another one of our contestants. I think they're our first wedding, even though they weren't on the same year — they met each other and did a lot of gigs together and fell in love. It's just the coolest thing. I think one of our executive producers is even gonna be marrying them!

How do you keep the show fresh and exciting after nine seasons?
As far as any new format twists, they haven't let us know of anything. I do know that they do plan on keeping the two winners this season and that was new last year. We have more new guest judges, which is always fun. Minnie Driver is a new judge this season — she studied dance at the Royal Ballet in England. ... A lot of these people have dance in their background and they love, love, love the show.

Off the set, what's your relationship like with fellow judge Nigel Lythgoe?
Me and Nigel met Prince Charles this year at Buckingham Palace. It was really surreal for me. Nigel's a hard person to get something for, and I know he's really involved with England still — their soccer teams and the BAFTA and everything else — that I just felt really good about saying to him, "Would you like to go to Buckingham Palace and meet Prince Charles?"

Joel McHale often teases you on The Soup. Does that ever get to you?
I have to say, the first time he did it, it really hurt my feelings. It made me cry. And the next time, he brought me down (to the show), and everybody from the set was running over to me, talking about the contestants and this, that and the other. And he was in makeup and I said, "You know you made me cry a couple weeks ago." And he said, "What? Mary, don't you know I love you and I respect you?" He said, "I love what you guys do on that show, I love your enthusiasm. That's why I brought you here today, because we love you." And so then I was always looking forward to it, and then I just started getting bummed when he wasn't showing me.

A little bit country, a lot of hard work

Sheryl Crow. Soak up the Sun singer shows she's not sitting around waiting for fame to come to her as she dives into a new musical challenge

For a couple of months now, Sheryl Crow has been loading her two young boys aboard a bus and taking off on a tour of country music radio stations around the United States.

She's visiting with DJs and programming directors, playing a few songs live, then hopping back on the bus to do it again a few hours down the road. It reminds her, fittingly, of a scene from Coal Miner's Daughter, the life story of Loretta Lynn.

"It really is like the scene where Doo zips up Loretta's dress and she runs in with her new acetate, her 45, and says, 'Here's my new record,' and she plays something on air, shakes a few hands and leaves," Crow said. "It really is a throwback to that and it's the most organic thing I've done in years."

The image is fitting. It was Lynn's handwritten note asking Crow to appear with the honky-tonk queen on the 2010 Country Music Association Awards that started this journey toward the genre for the 51-year-old singer-songwriter. She has a single, Easy, at country radio and will release her first country-oriented album, Feels Like Home, on Sept. 10.

When Crow finished that performance with Lynn and Miranda Lambert, Brad Paisley met her backstage and beseeched her to come home to the format she really belonged in.

She'd had some success at country in the past, teaming with Kid Rock on Picture in 2002. The song was a modest hit and even scored them a vocal event of the year nomination at the 2003 Country Music Association Awards.

Crow thought about it and Paisley's message took hold. But it meant she would have to change things up and embrace Nashville's country music culture. Eventually, he helped kick start the new record, suggested producer Justin Niebank and introduced her to songwriter Chris Dubois, who served as a co-writer and informal song editor. She changed her songwriting tack, looking to match the more visceral, story-telling style of the genre.

And no one succeeds in country music without courting radio — thus the bus. Most of country music's biggest stars started that way and Crow — 20 years after releasing her first album, the five times platinum Tuesday Night Music Club — didn't see herself as exempt, no matter how many millions of albums she's already sold.

The first day of the radio tour she hit larger markets like Knoxville and Chattanooga in Tennessee, Atlanta, Orlando, and some privately owned stations in smaller towns, too. One day, three states. Welcome to country.

"I say that it's fun, but it's the hardest thing I've ever done," Crow said. "Because sitting on the bus and only getting the gratification of only playing like a couple of songs, and then driving for two more hours and then getting to play a couple more songs. It's really hard, but it's great, you know? ... I've felt really embraced."

Bieber's reckless driving disturbing neighbourhood

Justin Bieber is getting on his neighbours' nerves once again, and this time it's because he won't slow down near his home.

The Canadian pop star was visited by the L.A. County Sheriff's Department in response to complaints about his reckless driving on the streets around his home, according to E! News. Police reportedly received numerous calls about the singer's driving on Monday alone, with many complaining that his speeding endangers the lives of neighborhood children playing outside.

Kanye loses battle of the Alamo

Kanye West's bid to project his video for New Slaves on the Alamo in Texas turned out to be a losing battle when it became clear he had no permit for the spontaneous event, according to MySanAntonio.com. West announced his intentions to use the landmark on his website, prompting around 500 people — both fans and protesters — to turn up. But police got there first. A similar event in Houston was also shut down. "It's sad that people have such little respect for the Alamo," said a spokesman for the Texas General Land Office.

Did Katy Perry nudge Pattinson away from Stewart?

It looks like Katy Perry might have been behind Robert Pattinson's decision to call it quits with Kristen Stewart, according to Life & Style.

Perry, a pal of Pattinson's, reportedly told the Twilight star that he deserved better than Stewart after her affair with director Rupert Sanders came to light last summer.

"Katy never really supported Rob's decision to get back with Kristen. She always said they wouldn't last," a source says. "Katy told Rob she didn't think their relationship could withstand the cheating scandal. And he deserved better than someone who would destroy a family (like Rupert's.)"

Since his breakup, Pattinson has been spotted out and about with Perry in New York and in Santa Barbara, where the pair hung out at a hotel and spied on a wedding rehearsal, according to People magazine.

"They just sat together and watched," a source says. "They were not affiliated with the wedding party and were not seen mingling with guests."

Apparently Amanda Bynes has even more to say about her arrest last week for drug possession and reckless endangerment.

"I'm so offended by all of this but so proud to not be a drug or alcohol user. I'm suing NYPD for illegally entering my apartment, lying about drugs on me and lying about me tampering with non existent drug paraphernalia," she posted to Twitter over Memorial Day weekend.

"Then I'm suing for being put into a mental hospital against my will, then locked up overnight for coming home after a facial and working out with my trainer like the good girl that I am." Bynes is also looking to the future, with a possible new career in the works: "I'm getting in shape and getting a nose job," she posted. "I'm looking forward to a long and wonderful career as a singer/rapper."

The Muppets took Manhattan, now it's time for Queens

Museum opening. Kermit and all his pals are ready to take up permanent residence at the Museum of the Moving Image

The Muppets are getting a new home in a Queens museum with a permanent exhibit that New York City hopes will persuade more tourists to venture beyond Manhattan.

Kermit the Frog, Miss Piggy, Bert and Ernie of Sesame Street fame, the stars of Fraggle Rock and other puppets, costumes and items from throughout Muppets creator Jim Henson's career have been donated to the Museum of the Moving Image, which is building a new gallery to house them, the institution announced Tuesday.

Encompassing almost 400 items ranging from original puppets to behind-the-scenes footage, the gift is a boon for the 25-year-old museum, which saw attendance skyrocket during a temporary exhibit in 2011 and 2012 of Henson's work. And it fulfills a cherished goal for Henson's widow and collaborator, Jane Henson, who died last month at 78.

"She loved the Muppet characters as though they were part of her own family," and the actual puppets themselves were very special to her, one of the couple's daughters, Cheryl Henson, said at a news conference.

"It was her dream to have these dear friends find a good home where they could be seen and enjoyed, and where new audiences could learn about the many facets of my father's work."

The exhibit is to open next year at the museum in the Long Island City neighbourhood, across the East River from midtown Manhattan. The city is chipping in $2.75 million toward the $5 million cost for a project.

"The only major item that I know will not be represented is the Muppet that they made of me," Mayor Michael Bloomberg joked at the news conference, where he bantered with Miss Piggy about the city's film and television industry and reminisced about their joint work in the 2008 TV special A Muppets Christmas: Letters to Santa, which featured Bloomberg as himself.

"You were wonderful — almost lifelike," the porcine prima donna quipped Tuesday. (For the record, Bloomberg's personal Muppet has a nice home of its own, in a reading room at the mayor's Manhattan town house.)

A puppeteer, screenwriter and producer, Henson introduced a raft of beloved and familiar characters during a career that spanned from the 1950s until his death in 1990, at 53.

Some, including his Muppets and Fraggles, appeared in both television shows and movies — among them the 1984 film The Muppets Take Manhattan, which depicted the fuzzy crew striving to stage a Broadway musical.

While being a shrewd and innovative businessman, "Jim Henson created indelible, memorable characters that live with us throughout a variety of media," said Carl Goodman, executive director of the Museum of the Moving Image. Henson's career showed "that you can march to the beat of a different drummer and succeed in this world," Goodman said.

The most popular time to go to Kenya is during the great migration, between the end of June to the end of September. LOREN CHRISTIE/METRO

How to get the most out of Kenya

Stress-free safari. Careful planning ensures your trip of a lifetime doesn't turn into a trip to forget

ON THE MOVE
Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

I recently returned from an incredible week-long safari in Kenya. There were moments that literally rendered me speechless — riding horseback amid a journey of adult and baby giraffes, sitting next to a Maasi warrior while we shared a bush breakfast overlooking the savannah and watching 13 lions (half a pride) dig into their own breakfast of cape buffalo. If you are ready to plan this once-in-a-lifetime experience, consider the following:

Book with a reputable tour operator accredited by KATO (Kenya Authorized Tour Operators). They will handle all the logistics of your trip. You can choose from a pre-set itinerary or ask them to customize a trip for you. I recommend sampling different areas of the country. In one week I visited the Maasi Mara National Reserve, which brought to life that postcard image of Africa with every imaginable animal from lions to zebras roaming the vast plains; Mt. Kenya, an area beloved by American actress and conservationist Stefanie Powers and spent two nights at the ol Donyo Lodge nestled below the Chyulu Hills, where we were treated to some of the best hospitality I have ever experienced. I'll never call a pre-dinner drink anything but a sundowner again!

Request that your trip include some time in one of the conservancies. Unlike the national parks, which are run by the government, a conversancy is less restrictive on off-road exploring and a portion of the entrance fees collected go back to local communities.

The most popular time to go is during the great migration, which means the end of June to the end of September. During that period you are pretty much guaranteed to see an incredible number of animals as well as a large number of tourists.

December and January are the warmest months. The wet months of March, April and May are considered the low season, although we had almost no rain on our trip, the temperature was in the mid-20s and it felt like we had the country to ourselves.

When building your budget, a good rule of thumb is $500 per person per day to cover lodging, food and drink, safaris, park entrance fees, guides and tips. You could of course spend more depending on how up-scale you want to go on your accommodations. Make sure to allocate some money to a quality camera with a telephoto lens, even if you just rent one.

Ooh la la worthy French Toast

French toast is synonymous with breakfast or brunch and this warm weather version is a must try.

With its three golden slices of egg loaf topped with caramelized bananas and sliced strawberries finished with maple cream sauté, it's simply delicious.

Ingredients

- 1 1/2 cups (360 ml) 35% Cream
- 1 egg
- 1 tsp (5 ml) cinnamon
- 1 tsp (5 ml) nutmeg
- 1 tsp (5 ml) allspice
- 12 egg bread slices
- 1 banana, thinly sliced
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) brown sugar
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) pure maple syrup
- 5 strawberries, thinly sliced
- Icing sugar, for dusting

1. To make French toast batter: Combine 1 cup of the cream, egg and spices in stainless steel bowl. Whisk thoroughly until smooth.

2. Dip each slice of egg bread for about 5 seconds in batter, then place immediately on lightly oiled griddle on medium heat.

3. Cook for approx. 2 minutes, then flip over and continue cooking until both sides are golden brown.

4. To make sauce: toss banana and brown sugar together in bowl. Add to small pan on medium heat with a small amount of butter. Cook until sugar begins to melt and bananas are a nice golden colour.

5. Reduce heat to low and add maple syrup. Keep the pan moving to ensure sugars don't burn.

6. Once syrup is bubbling, remove pan from heat and add remaining 1/2 cup of cream. Lightly stir until all ingredients come together. Keep warm.

7. Place 3 pieces of French toast on a plate and top with generous amount of sauce. Garnish with sliced strawberries and dust with icing sugar.

Disconnect from your desk at day-end

At the end of last year, the number of smartphones used around the world reached a colossal one billion. For businesses, the perks of technology advancements are endless. This is the case most of the time for consumers as well. However, with the world at your fingertips 24/7, it's easy to feel like you always need to be connected — especially when starting a new job. SO how do you leave work at work when it follows you home every day in the form of a mobile device?

MEGHAN GREAVES

Speak up

It's likely that the person contacting you in the evening or on weekends has no comprehension of how you spend your time outside of work. If there seems to be a common denominator when it comes to who's seeping into your "you" time, talk to them about it! Simply ask them to hold off on sending work-related emails during non-work hours unless it's truly urgent. Most people will understand.

Step outside yourself

Take a moment to see how others may feel about your smartphone habits. Whether it's your friend, parent or child, no one likes the feeling that you're prioritizing your attention to your device over them. So drop the phone and focus your attention on what really matters in that moment.

Learn to separate the importance of notifications

When you hear your phone go off, you likely go into a thought process that consists of: I wonder who that is? I wonder what it's about? I wonder if it's important? I wonder if I should check that? And so on. But not every alert is an urgent matter. Chances are, if it's something truly earth-shattering, the person trying to reach you will do so by calling.

Let go of the guilt

When you don't respond within a prompt time frame (for many people, that means immediately), you may feel like you're slacking. The truth is, unless you're being paid to be on the clock at all times, you're allowed to have work-free time.

Eyes on the wise

A guide to being guided. To make a search for your mentor successful, you must look for who you could learn the most from

RACHEL MCKEE
TalentEgg.ca

Sometimes a boost can be just what you need to jump-start your career, and finding a mentor is one great way to do that.

The mentor-mentee relationship is a precious one. A mentor can coach you in your chosen field and open up a whole variety of new opportunities to you while you also keep your teacher abreast of more recent developments you've learned as a young person in your industry.

What to do once you've met a potential mentor

1. Ask for advice, not mentorship: How you start a mentor-mentee relationship? Ask your potential mentor for advice about something rather than making the overly-formal request of "Will you be my mentor?" With any luck, your relationship will blossom from there.

2. Stay in touch: Once you've met a potential mentor, hopefully you will have had the chance to get their contact details. Send them an email saying how great it was to meet them and recall an interesting part of your conversation to signal to them that you were listening and you were engaged in what they were saying.

3. Ask them questions, but don't bombard them: A good mentor wants to help you, but you shouldn't take advantage of their good nature. They are probably a very busy person and while they likely want to answer your questions, they may not have a whole lot of time to do so.

More sorrow for Jays' sore Morrow

MLB. Starting pitcher unable to shake discomfort in forearm as Braves go on attack and win in extra inning

On Tuesday

| Braves | Blue Jays |

It didn't take long to realize there was something wrong with Brandon Morrow.

His velocity was down, his slider wasn't working and the opposing team was taking advantage. Through two laborious innings Morrow was tagged for four runs, two earned, before the Toronto Blue Jays yanked their starting pitcher.

The Braves then went to work on Toronto's bullpen, which gave up three home runs. Brian McCann hit a pair of homers — including a tie-breaking solo shot in the 10th inning — as Atlanta edged the Blue Jays 7-6 on Tuesday afternoon.

Morrow said his right forearm has been sore since his last appearance. There's no pain, just a lingering discomfort that hampered him on the mound.

"It wasn't explosive, the ball wasn't coming out of my hand really well," he said. "It was just like there wasn't anything in there.

Morrow's day was done after 47 mostly off-speed pitches. His fastball has averaged 93.6 m.p.h. this season according to FanGraphs, but dipped during the game to 91.

Morrow said he plans to let the forearm rest and still expects to make his next start Sunday in San Diego.

With Morrow gone, the Blue Jays turned to reliever Ramon Ortiz for three innings. Ortiz held on until giving up back-to-back homers by Evan Gattis and McCann that gave Atlanta a 6-4 lead.

The bullpen rebounded for Toronto (22-30) with scoreless innings from Aaron Loup, Brett Cecil and Steve Delabar. But in the 10th inning, McCann turned on the second pitch from Thad Weber (0-1) for his first multi-homer game of the season and the ninth of his career.

After the game, Weber was optioned to triple-A Buffalo, Ortiz was designated for assignment and the team announced closer Casey Janssen had been held out of the game with mild soreness in his shoulder.

Roy, Sakic look for Stanley Cup hat trick with Colorado

The Colorado Avalanche introduced Patrick Roy as their new coach Tuesday.

The 47-year-old Roy joins forces with former teammate-turned-executive Joe Sakic to fix a squad that's missed the playoffs three straight seasons. Roy and Sakic helped the Avs to Stanley Cup titles in 1996 and 2001.

As the man leading wrestling's charge to preserve its Olympic status, Nenad Lalovic believes he's done what it takes.

Three months after wrestling was dropped from the 2020 Games, Lalovic will present a new-look sport and revamped governing body to the IOC on Wednesday in a bid to keep its Olympic place.

"I'm confident," Lalovic, the new president of international federation FILA, said Tuesday.

"We did everything we could. Nothing else was possible."

Whitfield's mixed emotions on return to mixed discipline

One foot out the door.
Golden boy triathlete from 2000 Olympics close to calling it a career

Olympic triathlon champion Simon Whitfield isn't ready to officially retire just yet.

The 38-year-old from Kingston said Tuesday that he considers himself "semi-retired," and there's just a "10 per cent" chance he'll return to full-time racing.

"I'm leaving the door open simply because I don't want to pull a Brett Favre and say I'm done and then come back," Whitfield said at a Toronto Triathlon Festival news conference. "Maybe I just haven't come to terms with saying 'Fully retired,' so I'm putting semi in front of it to give myself an out."

Simon Whitfield opened his fourth career Olympic competition as Canada's flag-bearer in London last summer but suffered a broken collarbone in a bike crash during the triathlon. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Whitfield said although he's currently training at less than 50 per cent, he could still decide to race. But where it would normally take him 12 weeks to prepare for a competition, Whitfield said he'd likely need between 16 and 20 weeks to ensure he's able to cover a triathlon's 1.5-kilometre swim, 40-kilometre bike ride and 10-kilometre run at a high level.

Trouble is, that would also mean being away from his wife, Jennie, and their two daughters, Pippa and Evelyn.

"My family is my priority now and spending more time with them," Whitfield said. "I know what it takes to be at that top level and I really didn't like when people downplayed how much it took, so now for me to do both is very difficult."

"If I can find a place where I can balance it then I'll do that. Right now I can't so I'm not going to."

Whether Masai Ujiri ends up returning to the Raptors or not, we can presume this much from the way this prolonged pursuit has shaken out — he didn't want the job. Not really.

Ujiri earned $500,000 US as the Denver Nuggets' GM last year. The Raptors have offered him somewhere in the region of $2.5 million to do the same thing here.

Ujiri knows Toronto. He got his first big break here, rising from scout to assistant GM with the Raptors. He knows the organization top to bottom.

But this is the Raptors' problem. When an opportunity pops up to move to Toronto — no matter how good — everybody in the NBA wants to think about it.

Soak up the 2014 Kia Sorento

Review. New Sorento will satisfy as its DNA has been upgraded

MALCOLM GUNN
wheelbasemedia.com

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

The new 2014 Kia Sorento really depends on how you look at it, or more correctly, where you look at it.

Kia's current design renaissance encompasses the street-wise Soul and Sportage wagons as well as the Optima and Rio sedans. You can also place the current-generation Sorento that was launched for 2011 on that list. The lines are so right on the money in terms of contemporary style and carrying capacity that there was no point in monkeying around with the mid-sized wagon's looks.

Surprisingly, however, just about every other part of the Sorento's DNA has been altered, redesigned, or otherwise enhanced, kind of like when Peter Parker was bitten by the spider to become Spider-Man. Same kid on the outside, but better reflexes and more power. For 2014, Kia has mounted the Sorento on a platform that's identical to that of parent Hyundai's five-passenger Santa Fe Sport. Kia claims the new structure is stiffer than the 2013 version; attached to that is a stouter sub-frame that holds the powertrain more firmly.

There's also a new independent front suspension, while a more compact rear suspension aids interior space and restricts noise and vibrations from entering the cabin.

The Sorento's hydraulic power-steering system has been exchanged for a more efficient electric unit that features Comfort, Normal and Sport settings, depending on your desired level of steering firmness.

2014 Kia Sorento

- Type. Four-door, front- /all-wheel-drive wagon
- Engines (hp). 2.4-litre DOHC I4 (191); 3.3-litre DOHC V6 (290)
- Transmissions. Six-speed automatic
- Base price (incl. destination) $28,500

Design

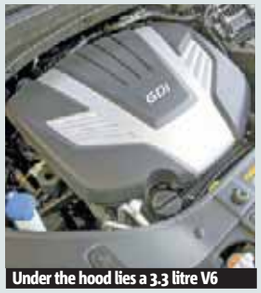
For 2014, the Georgia-built Sorento receives a minor nose tweak, including the ubiquitous mesh-style grille, updated headlights and optional fog lights, plus new tail light lenses. Otherwise the silhouette remains basically the same.



Under the hood lies a 3.3 litre V6

Engine

Under the hood, the 191-horsepower 2.4-litre four-cylinder with direct injection (fuel is sprayed under very high pressure directly into the combustion chambers instead of the intake manifold) carries on with its base-engine duties.

Kia's design team also took care of business on the inside, installing a new instrument panel and centre control stack with easier-to-find buttons and knobs. As before, Sorento can accommodate up to seven passengers with the optional third-row seat, but there's precious little legroom in back and equally scarce stowage room when loaded to the max with passengers. There is a solution if a more comfy back row is a must, but it requires visiting your Hyundai dealer to scope out the extended-wheelbase version of the Santa Fe.

For 2014, Kia is holding firm to the same LX, EX and SX trim levels. At the top, the SX model does its best to coddle passengers with a wood-trimmed interior with ventilated soft leather-covered seats on the inside, while self-leveling headlights and exclusive 19-inch wheels are installed outside.

Options include a power liftgate, panoramic sunroof, advanced voice-activated communications, infotainment and navigation controls (incorporating an eight-inch touch-screen) and a blind-spot monitoring system that constantly tracks vehicles in the immediate vicinity and issues an audible and visual alert should any get too close.

The good and bad guys of insurance

Autopilot. Heroes and villains: A big money fraudster who bit off too much and those kind people who left letters on my car

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

There's been lots of talk recently about the high cost of vehicle insurance. A report by the Fraser Institute concluded that provinces with "government insurance monopolies" tend to have higher premiums than provinces with "private sector, competitive markets."

But Ontario has the highest premiums of them all — higher than provinces with so-called insurance monopolies. If the Ontario NDP gets its way, the Ontario Liberal Government will include some insurance cost reform in its soon-to-be-tabled Budget.

Through the Insurance Bureau of Canada (IBC) the private insurers have just mounted a public campaign, to explain the Ontario discrepancy. Its argument, backed by the Fraser Report, is that most of the money is going to the wrong places — hidden legal fees, fraud, and excessive assessments by for-profit medical facilities.

One criminal outfit called "Project 92" was estimated to bill $25 million in fraudulent insurance claims. Its ringleader, now behind bars, staged fake accidents and had corrupt accomplices in every link of the repair and medical chain, who over-billed for everything.

When vehicles come together in noisy and expensive ways, it's not always the worst in people that shows up; sometimes it's the best. At least that's been my experience.

Over the years I've had three parked cars that have been hit by somebody when I wasn't around, and in every instance, they left a note, and eventually made proper restitution.

Mechanical chivalry

"When vehicles come together in noisy and expensive ways, it's not always the worst in people that shows up; sometimes it's the best."

The most memorable of these occasions was the latest one, involving the guy that delivers our morning paper in his old van. I guess on that fateful morning he jumped out of his van without first putting it into "park." It went down the street, driverless, first careening off our Mazda6, then settling into a Hyundai Sonata owned by my neighbour Tim.

When Tim and I went out in the morning, we both found notes on our cars, just listing a phone number to call about the damage. My left mirror was gone, and a fender was creased. Tim's car was a bit worse.

I eventually got hold of his teenage son, who explained that his father, being a recent immigrant, couldn't speak English too well. Both of them would come around on Saturday to make arrangements. I offered to call my insurance company. Maybe he just could pay the deductible? I was a bit worried that his body shop of choice might not do the job as properly as my body shop of choice.

He said I should not worry at all about getting my car fixed, or getting it fixed properly, because his father was a very honest man. I distinctly remember how he said all this. He said it slow and with no inflection, like he wasn't trying to sell me anything, just stating a fact.

The cars were fixed promptly and properly. I can't imagine how many days delivering newspapers it took to pay a body shop to fix both cars that way, but probably a few.

Car insurance is pricey, but common decency? That's priceless. ISTOCK

Airbag safety is, literally, all in your hands

Driving force. Be careful what you keep on your lap and how you handle your wheel

drive@metronews.ca

Do you "hook" the wheel when you make a turn, reaching in and holding it with your palm facing you?

If so, it's a very bad habit that you need to change. Not only does it affect your driving, but it has the potential for serious injury.

"You should drive with two hands at either side, at 10-and-2 or 9-and-3," says Scott Marshall, director of training for Young Drivers of Canada.

"By hooking your hand inside the wheel, you're limiting your steering ability. If you use your right hand, you can steer to your left, but you can't steer to your right if a problem occurs.

"There's a higher possibility that you can't control the car, and you get in a crash."

Your steering wheel contains an airbag which, in a crash, deploys in milliseconds at some 300 km/h to prevent you from hitting the dash or windshield.

If you're hooking the wheel when this happens, the airbag will break your arm.

If you drive with one hand at the top of the wheel, it puts your arm across the airbag. If it deploys, it will smash your hand into your face.

"You'll be severely injured because of your own knuckle and any jewelry you're wearing," Marshall says.

If your hands are at the sides of the wheel, the airbag will force them sideways and away from your face.

You may bruise your knuckles on the door panel, but it's preferable to risking broken bones or facial injuries.

"Don't be in fear of the airbag," Marshall says. "You should sit at least 25 centimetres away from the wheel, because the force is strongest at the beginning of its deployment.

"Sit as far back as you can, but so your right foot can touch the floor behind the brake pedal, with a slight bend in your leg.

Smart advice

"You'll be severely injured because of your own knuckle and any jewelry you're wearing."

Scott Marshall, director of training for Young Drivers of Canada
On the dangers behind not holding your steering wheel correctly and what can happen if you don't.

"When you have two hands on the wheel, you should have a slight bend in your arms.

"You can make adjustments with the back of the seat if you're shorter. You can sit closer, but recline the seat."

The right side of the dash also contains an airbag.

Passengers should sit as far back as possible.

They should also never put their feet on the dash, since a deploying airbag can cause severe leg injuries.

Injury can occur if the airbag goes off while you hook the steering wheel.
F. BOTTCHER

Rules

- No items on lap. Don't carry items on your lap. In a crash, hard or sharp items such as the corners of boxes can cause injury.
- Pets should be buckled up. A deploying airbag will kill a pet sitting on your lap. Pets should be in the back seat, buckled in with a travel harness or pet carrier.
- Be aware of the airbag positions. Most newer vehicles have at least six airbags. Know where they are, and sit safely around them.

WHEELBASE MEDIA

Wheels for retro rides

You can set your contemporary or classic car apart from the crowd with a cool set of wheels from California-based Vision Wheel. For example, the 34-year-old company offers a selection of 14 different styles in its American Muscle Legend sub-category. Shown here is the Torque model, the newest member of the series, that comes in gunmetal painted finish with a machined lip, plus an optional spinner-style cap. The Torque wheels are available in 15, 18 and 20-inch diameters with suggested retail prices ranging from just $80 to $186 US per wheel. Check out the complete range of Vision wheels at vision wheel.com.

Helmet of the stars

The For all you Formula One nerds out there Memento Exclusives of Great Britain sells anything from racing memorabilia to actual retired F1 racing cars ($150K+). However for something a bit more reasonably priced that won't require an extra spot in your garage, you can select from a limited number of helmets actually worn by the drivers. For example, this original Michael Schumacher model dates back to 1994 when he won his first of seven Formula One world-driving titles driving for the Benetton team. Schumacher's signature is on the visor. Asking price? About the equivalent of $17,600 US, but the company has a few other less expensive helmets. All can be found at mementoexclusives.com.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
There is no point in trying to avoid obligations. Fortunately, what you have to do over the next few days won't be as difficult as you fear. Once you start, you may enjoy it.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You're avoiding a showdown with someone you love. It may be understandable but it's not very smart. The sooner you let each other know why you are so angry, the sooner the healing process can begin.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Your luck is about to turn for the better and before you know it good things will be coming at you from all directions. Good people too. You will attract just the right person at just the right time.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Aim to be a bit more tactful when dealing with colleagues. In a matter of days you will have a clearer picture of what needs to be done to turn a loss into a gain but you don't have to be pushy about it.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Make sure your long-term plans are practical. If you have not thought them through properly, they could fall short of expectations. Know your goals and have a Plan B ready.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You think too much and because of that, you worry too much as well. The message of the stars is that you should stop analyzing each and every detail. Go with the flow.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You may be yearning for things you are unlikely to get. But over the next two days a more realistic attitude will set in. Then, remarkably, you will find that what you desire suddenly comes easily to you.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Don't get so caught up in the social whirl today that you fail to notice a career opportunity of some kind. In a matter of weeks, you could move several rungs up the ladder of success.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You don't have time to wallow in negativity — there are too many interesting things going on in the world. One special person needs help though. Spare them an hour of your time and get them smiling.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Do something that makes you feel good about yourself today. Your problems may seem huge but in reality they can't hurt you in the slightest. What is it that makes you feel glad to be alive? Do it some more.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Life will offer you opportunities but it is up to you whether or not you do anything with them. An interesting offer will come your way over the next few days. Make it your own.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Fame and fortune can be yours if you want them but do you? As a Pisces, you may prefer to keep a low profile, but if so that's a shame as you have so much to offer. SALLY BROMPTON
